Title: CONSUMPTION SPENDING OF HOUSEHOLDS IN THAILAND

Abstract

This study aims to investigate the factors determining consumption spending of households in Thailand. It also investigated whether household consumption spending changes over time and examines whether household consumption spending is different among different regions. Our finding reveals that only income of households, a number of income receivers and an exit from agricultural sector have influences over consumption spending of households in Thailand. Moreover, households in Bangkok and vicinity region, in northern region and in north eastern region only spend approximately 40 percent of their incomes on consumption whereas households in central region and in southern region spend approximately 60 percent of their income on consumption. Then the study is extended to study overall spending of households in Thailand. Our finding reveals that households in northern region and in northeastern region still spend little in comparison to their incomes. That is, they only spend roughly 46 percent of their incomes. Spending of households in Bangkok and vicinity region, in central region and in southern region is greater as they spend more than 65 percent of their incomes. Nevertheless, our finding indicates that consumption spending and overall spending of households in Thailand do not change over time.
