

ANSWER KEY

4. The findings indicate that subjective evaluation of health is more influential than is the actual extent of physical condition in determining psychological well-being.