

ANSWER KEY

A summary:

Rosen (2008) suggests that arguments are tools to understand and make meaning of the world, and to construct new knowledge. Arguments in university are efforts to build knowledge. Written arguments from observations are presented in journals or to colleagues. The process of challenging and responding in arguments helps make new knowledge.